Through insider accounts and corporate recordings, the documentary follows the birth of Enron in 1985 to its zenith in 2000, becoming the largest natural gas merchant in North America. Its rise is plagued by unethical and underhanded business practices, including profiteering on the California energy crisis at the expense of the public. The company's collapse is heralded by the extravagant and outrageous spending of its top executives, who leave the company and its employees in a sinking ship.
